English summary: This monograph studies the economic use of birds from the beginning to the domestication of some of them. Since when do humans hunt birds and how did they use them? The development of methods and significance of fowling and bird keeping are examined with a particular focus on economically relevant, especially fowl-like species.

Different kinds of ancient Near Eastern evidence and source materials (archaeozoological, archaeological and philological) are examined and compared to ancient Egyptian and Greco-Roman sources. The book is based on a revised habilitation thesis that was critically evaluated by experts of all relevant disciplines and topics. In its breadth and comprehensiveness, it is an unique work and will be the indispensable reference work on poultry in the Ancient Near East for many years to come.

German description: Die Studie untersucht die wirtschaftliche Nutzung von Vögeln von deren Beginn an. Sie geht zuerst der Frage nach, seit wann Menschen Vögel fangen und wie sie diese dann nutzten. Im Anschluss daran werden Bedeutung und Methoden des Vogelfangs in späteren Perioden behandelt. Es folgt eine Untersuchung der Einföhrung der Geflügelhaltung und deren Entwicklung, besonders anhand wirtschaftlich wichtiger Arten. Zuletzt wird auf die Gruppen der Hühnervögel, heute mit Abstand die ökonomisch wichtigste Vogelfamilie, eingegangen. Indem die Arbeit archäozoologische, archäologische und philologische Quellen auswertet und ägyptische und klassische Quellen zum Vergleich heranzieht, bietet sie ein einzigartiges Kompendium zur altorientalischen Geflügelwirtschaft.

Es handelt sich um die überarbeitete Druckfassung einer Habilitationsschrift, die von Vertretern aller herangezogenen Fachgebiete (einem Archäozoologen, einem Vorderasiatischen Archäologen, einem Assyriologen und einem Ägyptologen) beurteilt wurde.
